With the late back pay and double grab, before us, the course of Congress in 1816, becomes of uncommon interest. The Congress of that day was scarcely better than the Congress of' 73, in this extra pay business. The thing was no more popular then than now, and the people got just as indignant about it then as now. Legislatures then, as now, passed indignation resolutions and requests for repeal. The indignation of that day, however, has comparatively little proportion, in amount of the grab, to that of 1873. The victim went down stairs four steps at a time, and has ever since been profoundly amazed at the reception he met with.
